Performance Management: When, Why and How

Effective performance management is often an afterthought, rather than the foremost goal of managers and supervisors and is usually traced to poor planning and communication. This session will help you strategize and excel at managing your employee's performance.

Targeted Violence, Threat Assessments & Threat Management

2015 continued the disturbing convergence of workplace, school-place and domestic violence, with 2016 on a similar trajectory. Targeted violence is not an event; it is a process with a narrowing of focus, ramping up behaviors and leakages of intent. This advanced presentation will address warning signs of an emerging threat potential, indicators of a pathway of targeted violence, and a preliminary threat assessment approach involving threat posturing, preparatory behaviors and rehearsal fantasies of targeted violence. Considerations for threat management will also be discussed. The goal of this presentation is to provide attendees with a threat assessment/management framework to assist their efforts in their targeted violence prevention and intervention protocols.
